KARLA DICKENS
Hung, strung and quartered WARRIOR WOMAN

Turning the washing basket upside down, inside out looking for Reg Gundies resilient and well made

No frills
no pastel flowers or see-through lace no crutchless g-strings

Hardened undergarments big girls’ undies protective covers personal security guards

The world needs facing wearing raw pain, old pain shared and naked pain standing up, showing up

Being heard and being counted holding courage tight ready to love and be loved to be real, to be hurt, to be brave

Big-girl underwear big-girl knickers tough and ready until the time allows then the cheeks will shake

Run, dance, fart and sing as the nakedness is unleashed on the darkest of nights glowing under moons of glory

Warrior women play again butts blowing in the breeze gracefully relaxed in empowered freedom

WHO'S LUCKY?

The phrase ‘lucky country’ is the base-point from which these works grew. I was grateful and relieved to find that Donald Horne, the man who first coined this famous phrase in 1964, was ironically condemning Australia for its complacency and failure to acknowledge its history.

The work comprises two parts:

- The first part, entitled ‘Unlucky bastard’, consists of a black straight-jacket adorned with embroidered patches and inscribed text. Each of the three embroidered patches contains an upward-facing white horse-shoe imprinted with the word ‘lucky’ and a downward-facing red, black and yellow horse-shoe imprinted with the word ‘bastard’. My playful and straightforward observation is that you are lucky in Australia if you are white and a bastard if you are Aboriginal. I have hand-painted a number of quotes from Horne’s book ‘The Lucky Country’ onto the strait-jacket. They are there to remind those who still literally believe in the phrase—of the author’s original intention.

- The second part, collages using rusty oil- and petrol-cans I found abandoned in the bush, are adorned in white lettering with the title ‘Unlucky’. While digging through the old dump near a closed mission-camp, I played the role of anthropologist; studying repurposed oil-cans like treasured artefacts. Hard-rust tells many stories. As I interpreted the artefacts, they spoke to me of fortunes made from this country—on the backs of its traditional owners. Buckets of money made by mining and pastoral businesses with government blessings; but at the cost of great suffering and hardship by those who will never, ever get a lucky break.
